Oh blühe fort du deutscher Sang!

Singers wanted! That was the message 100 years ago as the Saengerbund was looking for new singers. On April 23, 1909 the Washington Post published a story announcing plans for the Saengerbund's upcoming annual election of officers, with an interesting caveat.

New Officers Will consider Proposed School of German Song.

The Saengerbund will hold its regular election of officers on September 5. The new officers will at once take up the proposition of starting a school of German language and song. No definite conclusions have been reached but it is thought that the project will be carried

Who remembers this man?
Who knows of all the musical compositions he created during his time?

It is a rather interesting story that came about when the Saengerbund received an email last year from a gentleman by the name of Wolfgang Greven in Germany. He inquired if we had any records of a former conductor.
